The authorities, scholars and admirers who came to the Third National Willa Cather Symposium have now returned home with new knowledge and a new excitement about this American author and also about BYU.

The nation and the world are beginning to notice this campus for what it is: a smorgasbord of cultural, political and scientific information and knowledge. Some people don't seem to understand the recognition and honor that hosting such events brings to us here at BYU.

In October, BYU will host the American Franz Liszt Society Festival '88. Liszt followers from all over the world will come to perform and analyze his works.

At the end of August at BYU's Dry Mesa Quarry in Colorado, archaeologists discovered a dinosaur bone that "helped push

UNIVERSE OPINION

BYU into the 'big five' of museum collections," said John S. McIntosh, internationally-known expert of sauropod dinosaurs. Research is being done all the time ranging from ways to help the human body better accept artificial organs to suggestions on how to decrease the number of people who die and the number of houses destroyed or damaged in natural disasters. Though it should come as no surprise, the May 2, 1988 issue of U.S. News and World Report said, "The country's highest density of foreign-language skills is not at Cambridge or Berkeley, but in Provo, Utah, on the Brigham Young University campus."

BYU has the capability of instruction for 58 different languages from German and French to Quechua, Karotongan and Turkish. As faculty and students we have a responsibility to support the activities. Not only because we get credit for it after writing a one page summary of the event, but also for our own personal learning and education. "The world is our campus" doesn't mean that we have to leave the campus to go to Nebraska to find Cather or to Hungary to find Liszt, because lately, it seems that the world is coming to us.

On Sept. 8, Evtan Bentsur, the Consul General from Israel, spoke in the David M. Kennedy Center for International Studies. There were not more than 30 people present. His presentation was interesting, but the conversation and questions afterward were much more stimulating.

If we can't become involved in events of national and international significance here on our own campus, then involvement in events and places of significance off campus will be much less probable. Supporting BYU and its activities is a way of extending our education beyond the classroom and, many professors should agree, the best education comes from discussion, extra study and outside application of what we learn from our textbooks.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Line by line

Dear Editor:

A couple of days ago I went to the Financial Aid window to get a financial aid packet for my sister who is planning on applying to BYU. I asked one of the window attendants if they could hand me a packet under the counter. When he informed me, with great regret, that I would have to wait in the line to get it I was so amazed that I repeated my question, thinking that he must not have understood me. He then assured me that I indeed must wait in line by saying,

"I know it's stupid, but that's our policy."

I am well aware that waiting in long lines is simply part of attending a large university, but when one is asked to wait perhaps a half-hour for something that is as time-consuming as giving the time of day one might question the validity of such a "policy."

Maybe I do not understand the Financial Aid Department's reasoning, but it seems to me that it would be easier for everyone if the packets and other such forms were placed somewhere one could simply take one and not waste everyone's time.

Defensive move

Dear Editor:

I write in rebuttal to a recent letter to the editor written by Art Bassett of Orem. In his letter he petitions The Daily Universe to ban Doug Gibson from the editorial page in order to "fairly and unemotionally present all sides of an issue." Bassett is asking for the removal of the conservative view from the editorial page. In its place he is asking The Universe to feature a guest editorial from the opposing liberal camp.

At the root of it all seems to be contradiction. Bassett is demanding equality of space for opposing views, and at the same time demanding the ousting of the views opposed to him.

How convenient!

I would also like to come to the defense of Doug Gibson. I have read several of his commentaries and find them very academic in nature. No, I don't agree with everything he says, but I don't feel we should burn him at the stake either. Bassett characterizes Gibson as being nearly a radical white supremacist. In doing so he clearly defines his own political position as being radically liberal. Really, Mr. Bassett, did you expect to read a pro-abortion and socialized medicine piece in a moderate medium like The Daily Universe? Try subscribing to the ACLU newsletter for unobjectionable points of view.

I come to the defense of Gibson because, contrary to how Bassett feels, he has the right to space. He is also entitled to his opinions and the right to express them, regardless of his political persuasion. Finally, Gibson is touching on an important subject in his editorials. His underlying theme seems to be the topic of federalism: The idea of sovereign states within a sovereign state. It is an idea which is slowly disappearing under both the Republican and Democratic platforms. I find comfort in knowing that Gibson has at least a fundamental understanding of the constitutional structure. If you want to debate the issues Mr. Bassett, I suggest you first grasp the framework.

Changing times

Dear Editor:

A few months ago, I returned from my mission and began my preparations to return to BYU. As I packed my bags, I found my Copier Accountant card, which I had purchased during the semester before leaving on my mission. I brought it with me, knowing that it would come in handy.

I needed to make some copies on Wednesday, and discovered that the Law Library no longer uses the Copier Accountant system.

I found the Copier Accountant still in use at the Law Library, however, my card was out of date. A very nice young lady put my card into a machine and told me it had 68 cents credit (that's a neat trick, since copies cost five cents each). I knew that my card still had over 50 copies credited to it (I had purchased 100 copies for $5), so I suggested that the 68 referred to the number of copies, not a dollar value.

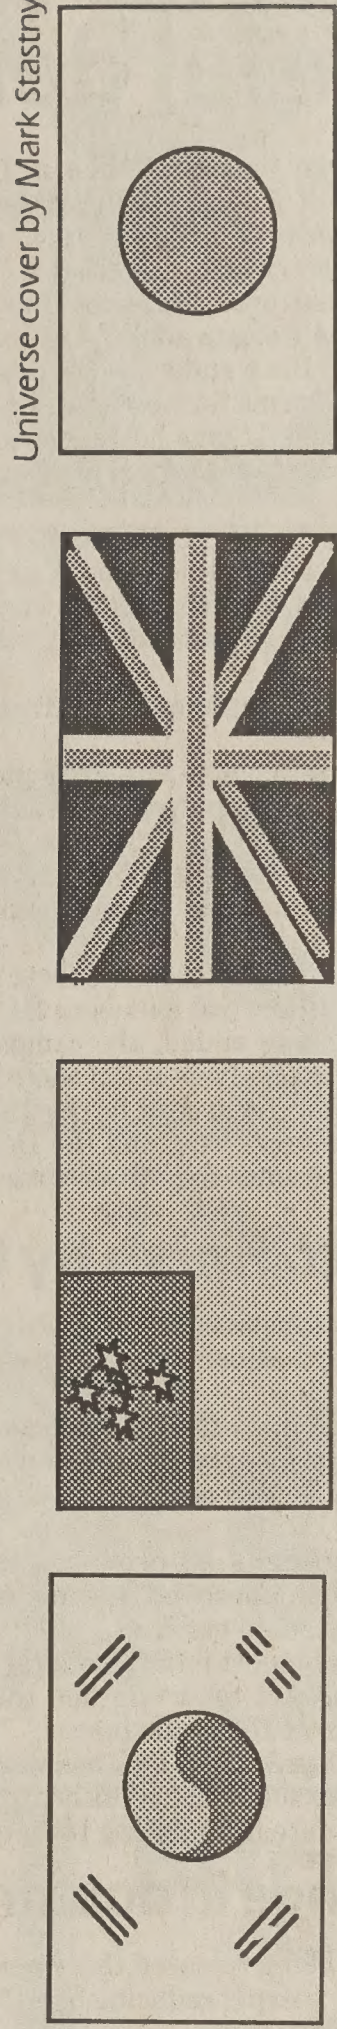

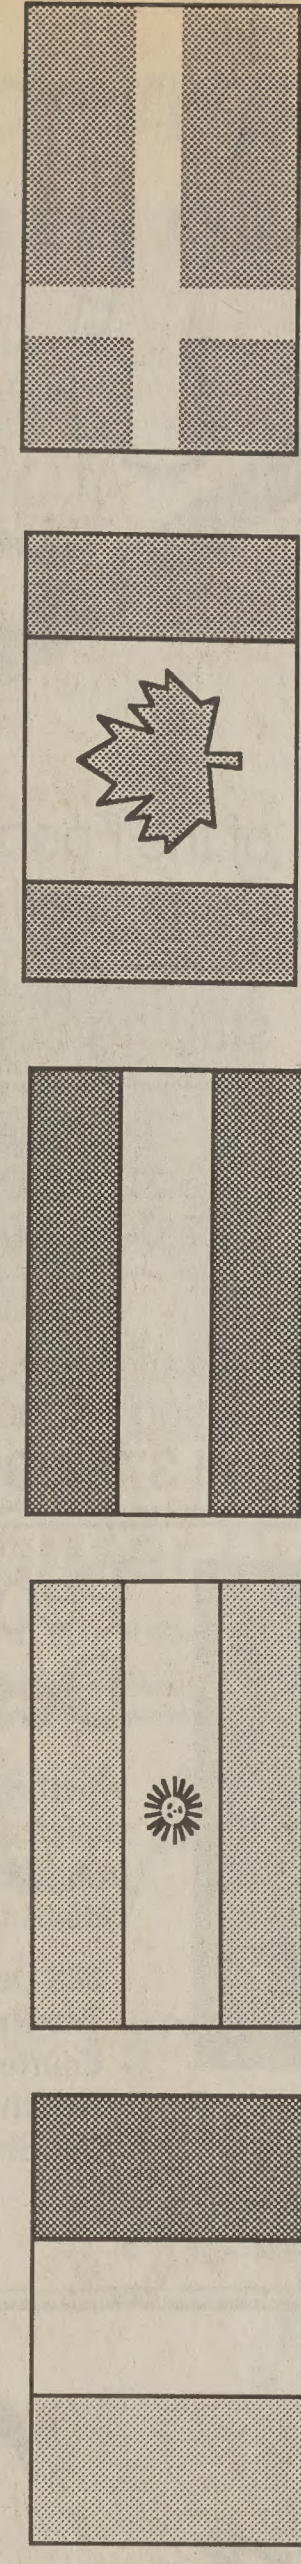

I was informed that the cards are based on dollar value now, not number of copies (as was the case two and one-half years ago), and the young lady suggested that it was probably 60 cents, not 68. I was given a new card and told I was now a lawyer since she had no cards for "regular" students. The card had 60 cents credit on it, enough for 12 copies.

Before leaving, I asked where to return the used card to get back the $1 deposit. I had paid, and she informed me that there is no deposit now. Say good-bye to another dollar.

So, Pres. Holland, please consider the $3.80 as my donation to "True Blue BYU" (or is it "Green"), and keep your silly bumper stickers.

Bush, Dukakis clash in presidential debate

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C.— George Bush and Michael Dukakis clashed over deficits, drugs and the Pledge of Allegiance in a crackling campaign debate Sunday night. Bush said, "I hope people don't think I'm questioning his patriotism," but Dukakis said he was and added, "I resent it."

The presidential candidates tangled over the Iran-Contra affair when Dukakis said it was a "tragedy" for the Reagan administration to sell arms to Iran in exchange for hostages and said Bush endorsed the deal.

Bush said, "Yes, we shouldn't trade arms for hostages, but we have made vast improvements in our anti-terrorism." Some hostages were freed during the arms dealing with Iran, but others were seized and nine Americans remain in captivity.

The combatants in a close race for the White House also argued defense policy before an audience of a few thousand people in the Wait Chapel at Wake Forest University and tens of millions of television viewers. Neither man committed an obvious gaffe during the 90 minutes that could damage his candidacy.

Each man used his two-minute closing statement to deliver a version of his standard campaign speech.

Republican Bush said the voters want change but contended, "We are the change, I am the change." He said the nation doesn't want to return to the "malaise" of the Carter administration.

Dukakis, the son of immigrants, said he wants to make the American dream come true for all citizens. "The best America is not behind us. The best America is yet to come."

The two men shook hands at center stage before the debate and again after. "Good job," Dukakis said to his Republican rival following their give-no-quarter 90 minutes on stage. Once the debate ended, the campaigns unleashed dozens of supporters to provide partisan analysis of the confrontation.

Bush said Dukakis' support for a nuclear freeze in the 1970s would have worked to the advantage of the Communist bloc, and the Democrat accused the Reagan administration of cutting into the "fiber and the muscle" of conventional forces.

Congress hurries to finish by Oct. 16

WASHINGTON — Social initiatives from welfare to child care are hanging in the balance as Congress draws toward adjournment, increasingly impatient and preoccupied with presidential politics.

In a year of rhetoric about the American family, lawmakers have yet to complete action on major initiatives to raise the minimum wage, expand and improve child care, reform the welfare system and guarantee leave to workers with pressing family responsibilities.

A number of appropriations bills, including one providing about $300 billion for the Defense Department, have been approved in some form, but differences remain between the House and Senate versions.

Also on the incomplete roster is the biggest environmental bill of the 100th Congress, a revision of the Clean Air Act to strengthen the battle against urban air pollution, acid rain and airborne toxic substances.

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., has warned senators to be prepared for Saturday sessions if the 100th Congress is to end by Oct. 16—two weeks beyond the original target date for finishing business.

Study proposes change in doctor's fees

BOSTON — A long-awaited study being released this week could dramatically change the way doctors are paid, sharply reducing fees for many kinds of operations while raising charges for office visits.

The study has been the object of intense speculation and apprehension in the medical world since it was undertaken 2½ years ago by economist William C. Hsiao of the Harvard University School of Public Health.

The massive project attempts to determine the amount of work involved in everything doctors do — from checkups and well-baby visits to brain surgery and coronary bypasses — so they can be paid what their services are worth.

There is widespread agreement, Hsiao said, "that the current payment system is unworkable. The fees are distorted and inequitable."

Hsiao's plan, requested by Congress, will try to correct that. It would pay physicians more for the time they spend thinking about patients, examining them and talking to them and less for specific procedures.

Billy Carter dies of pancreatic cancer

PLAINS, Ga. — Billy Carter, the former "first brother" whose beer drinking, candor and business ventures amused and sometimes embarrassed the Carter administration, died Sunday of pancreatic cancer. He was 51.

William Alton Carter III married his high school sweetheart, Sybil, and joined the Marines. He expanded the family peanut business into a $5 million a year operation that was placed in trust while his brother Jimmy was president.

He put his name on a brand of beer that flopped, got into hot water with remarks denounced as racist or anti-Semitic, accepted money from Libya and was forced to sell some properties to pay a debt to the Internal Revenue Service.

Billy, who cultivated his image as a sometimes profane, beer-drinking good ol' boy, was an avid reader, a fighter who refused to go down quietly under the pressures of alcoholism or cancer.

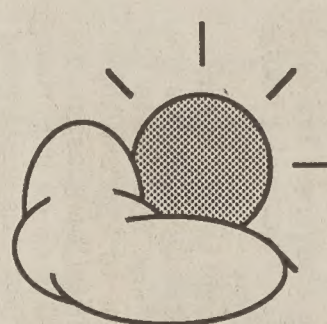

He underwent an experimental program at Emory University Hospital, and in May checked into the National Cancer Institute in Bethesda, Md.

Two gold medal swimmers sent home

Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — Troy Dalbey and Doug Gjertsen, America's two double gold medal swimmers who got in trouble with the Seoul police for walking off with a marble lion's head from a hotel bar, were ordered dropped from the team and sent home Sunday.

The U.S. Olympic Committee, after a meeting of its executive board, ordered the pair returned to the United States as soon as permitted by South Korean authorities.

Robert Helmick, president of the USOC, said Dalbey and Gjertsen had expressed profound regret and offerred to resign from the team during a morning meeting with the board in the same hotel where their trouble started early Saturday morning.

Helmick said Dalbey and Gjertsen would be allowed to keep their gold medals. He also said they could face further action from U.S. Swimming, the governing body of the sport.

Foreign students in America are 'the cream of the crop'

BRENT J. HALES
Universe Staff Writer

Foreign students are flooding the U.S. graduate science schools and are graduating in the top 1 percent, according to a recent report.

According to Dean Ettore Infante of the University of Minnesota's Institute of Technology, "who was quoted in the Jan. 11 edition of Time magazine, 'We have the best.'"

Also in an article in the March 21 issue of U.S. News and World Report, California Institute of Technology Dean Arden Albee said, "It looks like we're probably three-quarters Asian."

In the Time Magazine report, University of Wisconsin Dean John Wiley said that foreign students who apply for masters and Ph.D. programs are among the top 1 percent of the cream of the crop.

One reason is that students are coming to the United States from all over the world. Jean-Jaques Servan-Schreiber, chairman of the international committee for Carnegie-Mellon, was quoted in the Time article as saying, "I think America is becoming a diversity of the world."

While foreign students are making high marks in the academic world, American students are not going after graduate level engineering courses, the Time Magazine report said.

In no field has the influx (of foreign students into the United States) been pronounced as in graduate engineering," the report said.

According to the International Student Office at the University of Utah, the largest number of foreign students are majoring in engineering, followed by business management, physical sciences and then health sciences.

BYU's International Student Office was unavailable for comment.

Also according to the University of Utah International Student Office, a majority of students there are from Mainland China with 182 students — 15 undergraduate and 167 graduate.

The second largest group of students there are from Taiwan with 154 students — 33 undergraduate and 131 graduate.

The percentage of students who are coming to the United States from China has decreased because of the "brain drain" problem China is now facing. According to a U.S. News & World Report article, China has been losing some of its best young brains to the United States.

China is decreasing the number of students it is sending throughout the world and is diverting students from the United States to other countries and putting time limits on the students' graduate study programs.

"Of the 36,000 students who have come to the United States since China opened its doors, only a quarter of them have returned to China," said the report.

China has stopped renewing passports for those who have already spent four or five years working on Ph.D.'s and has ruled out post doctoral research, the report said.

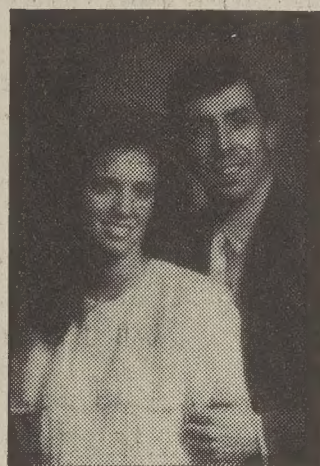

Beijing has also set a maximum of 3,000 a year on the number of students it will finance abroad, the report said. "Only 20 percent will be assigned to the United States compared to 7,000 government supported who are here now."

Beijing is also taking other measures to prevent their students from coming to the United States, by refusing visas for spouses and children to accompany students abroad, the report said.

While China is having problems with students leaving for the United States, the U.S. is having its own problems coping with educating its immigrant children.

According to a study from the National Coalition of Advocates For Students, 6 percent of the country's public school students, or 2.5 million are immigrants.

International students come to BYU to improve their employment chances

Ryoki Machida, a senior from Tokyo, Japan, majoring in mathematics came to BYU because of both the low cost and the opportunity to study English.

By ADRIAN GOSTICK
Lifestyle Editor

Five years ago Peter Furukawa and his wife packed their things, stepped on an airplane and in the pursuit of a brighter future came to America to study.

Furukawa is just one of thousands of foreign students who enter the United States every year in the hope of increasing their chances of employment after graduation.

"I am lucky to benefit from your (America's) ancestors who created a country where you can have security both to study and be financially secure," Furukawa, a graduate student in the MBA program, said.

Furukawa, who left the security of an office job in Sao Paulo to accept a scholarship at the University of Utah before transferring to BYU, said he wanted to attend school, but Brazil's schools were not interested.

"It is a lot harder to get into schools in Brazil," he said. "The degree from BYU will be just as beneficial, though. American degrees are looked up to in Brazil."

Ryoki Machida, a senior from Tokyo, Japan, majoring in mathematics, said he came to America because of the inexpensive education offered.

"If I went to a Japanese college it would be more expensive," Machida said. "I also wanted to study English and if I had stayed in Japan I never would have had the chance. It is important to speak English in my country."

Boyd Davies, a junior from Spruce Grove, Alberta, Canada, majoring in elementary education, left for America because the schools in Canada had no room.

"Here, almost everyone has the same standards and you can concentrate on your academics without worrying about people watching you because you're a Mormon."

— Boyd Davies
BYU student
Alberta, Canada

"I like it here, though," Davies said. "LDS university students in Canada are so uptight about breaking their high standards they can't relax."

"Here, almost everyone has the same standards and you can concentrate on your academics without worrying about people watching you because you're a Mormon."

To these students, America is not always the land of freedom.

"The only constraint I feel bad about, even though it is no ones fault, is that immigration keeps track of you all the time," Furukawa said. "It makes me upset, but I know it has to be done. It's tough."

According to Machida, his biggest adjustment was to the sincerity of the people.

"In Japan we have to care about strangers," he said. "We are very careful and very polite. Americans are friendly, but I don't think they care as much as we do."

He also said it is tough to be a minority on campus.

"The people are pretty nice, but I want to see more diverse people, more blacks, etc," said Machida.

As for Furukawa, the American public surprised him.

"I heard they were very cold, but not here," he said. "I felt very welcome from the beginning — maybe because of the LDS atmosphere."

Space program is ready for success

Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — For the second time in the brief history of manned space flight, the United States is poised to rebound from tragedy.

The explosion of the shuttle Challenger on Jan. 28, 1986, bore some striking similarities to another disaster almost exactly 19 years earlier — the Apollo 1 fire of Jan. 27, 1967.

In both cases, poor design, inadequate management, safety lapses and communications breakdowns were at fault. Recovery required months of remorse, realignment and repair.

Failure to recover from Apollo 1 would have derailed America's goal of a manned lunar landing before the end of the decade. Another Challenger-type accident could deal a death blow to the nation's space program.

But the National Aeronautics and Space Administration bounced back brilliantly from the 1967 fire and sent astronauts to the moon.

Program gets international recognition

Students in the English as a Second Language Program, taught in the Amanda Knight Hall, learn their new language in a variety of ways, including playing games.

BY HISAYOSHI IWAMITSU
Senior Reporter

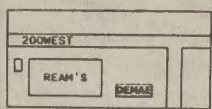

BYU's English Language Center, a language institution that teaches English as a Second Language, will have the highest number of students in the 1988-89 academic year since 1980, when the ELC was established under the direction of the BYU Linguistics Department and Division of BYU Continuing Education.

According to coordinator Glen W. Probst, who has been directing the center since 1980, the number of students in the 1988-89 academic year will reach more than 500, which is a

"They were very interested in our technology, which is the computer lab we use here," he said.

Cathy Chamberlain, an ELC part-time teacher, said for a computer program, the ELC uses a hit film by Steven Spielberg, "Raiders of the Lost Ark," to build up each student's vocabulary.

Chamberlain, 23, a BYU graduate student in the TESL Master Program, from Berkeley, Calif., said, "The computer program consists of 13 series. Students watch each scene and answer questions inquired by the computer on the screen."

She said this program also helps each student improve the ability of listening comprehension.

According to Probst, the ELC in the Amanda Knight Hall, 800 N. University Ave., opens at 8 a.m. Monday through Friday. There are 23 part-time and six full-time instructors. The ELC divides students into five levels depending upon each student's English proficiency.

"Attention is given to listening comprehension, speaking, reading, writing and grammar. The principal objective is to develop fluent, oral communication," he said.

"Although students in this intensive program are not regular, matriculated university students, they nevertheless have ready access to BYU library facilities, the learning resource services (in 3033 JKHB) and the various language laboratories," he said.

In addition to these, the ELC offers students skill classes, including TOEFL (Test of English as a Foreign Language), American music, home care, conversation and American history or literature, said Donna Pepperdine, 25, a part-time teacher at the ELC.

These skill classes, she said, give students an opportunity to know each other better through English conversation.

Koichi Watanabe, 27, a Japanese student in level 4, from Gifu, Japan, said the ELC provides a good environment for learning English.

"Teachers are very restrictive. If we use our native languages during school, they said we would be kicked out from ELC," he said. But he said ELC students need to be reminded.

"Especially to Japanese students, it is very difficult to keep speaking English all the time, because more than 50 percent of students are Japanese," Watanabe said.

Guillermina Barco, 23, a student from Chihuahua, Mexico, also in level 4, said she committed herself to speak English even with her Mexican friends. "There are many Spanish speakers in ELC; so I have to be careful not to speak Spanish," she said.

Jamie Zhang, a Chinese student in level 4, from Shanghai, China, said she used to go to an English language program offered by California State University. "But in the area, Monterey Park, where I used to live, many Chinese also live."

She said she realized that environment is very important for people who strive to learn English.

"Because of fewer Chinese students here in ELC," her English improves, she said.

Kennedy Memorial cleaned with love

Associated Press

DALLAS — As John Koohyun Kim explained it, his labor of love for a fallen president whose ideals and country he had embraced could not wait.

So Kim got down on his knees Friday and began a thorough cleaning job of the Kennedy Memorial in downtown Dallas.

Kim said he had listened to John F. Kennedy's inaugural speech as a youth in South Korea and was "impressed with his celebration of democracy." He later memorized the speech for a high school class and he credits it with helping him learn English.

"I loved him," Kim said.

Watanabe said the ELC program, which covers all the skills he needed to learn, is well-organized, but he brought up an unsatisfactory point.

"It seems to me that the ELC program is designed for students who want to pass the TOEFL examination. Some of them are here simply because they want to learn and speak English," he said.

Firefighters having busy year

Local firefighters return home after 21 days battling blazes

By ERIC WHITE
Special to the Universe

For many fighters of forest fires throughout the West, it has been a busy year. Local firefighters are no exception.

Dawn Butler and Michael Cook are from the Uintah National Forest Ranger Station in Spanish Fork.

Both returned two weeks ago from fighting fires in Wyoming - Butler in Yellowstone and Cook in the Grand Tetons.

Each spent more than three weeks trying to stop the fires raging in those areas before a Forest Service time regulation forced them to return home.

Like other Utah firefighters, they left their families and most of the comforts of modern society while fighting what have been called the worst rangefires in a century.

According to Cook and Butler, fighting fires is tough, but they love it. "I like this," said Butler, a 28-year-old mother of one from Provo. "It's a challenge. It's exciting. I enjoy the extra spice in my life."

"The excitement is a main attraction — that and the physical demands," continued 31-year-old Cook of Springville. "Not everybody can do it."

"There is a lot of satisfaction in having a work force of people and equipment that you can guide to stop this natural catastrophe from happening," he said.

What do these firefighters actually do on the lines? According to Cook, they average 15 hours of work each day, unless the helicopters do not come to bring them out, forcing the firefighters to hike to camp. Then the day can stretch to 18 hours.

Often the crews will have to work night shifts. According to Cook and Butler, those shifts really take their toll because of the difficulty of the adjustment on their systems, and the fact that it is difficult to sleep during the day because of the heat and bugs.

"You ignore pain, and you ignore a lot of stuff that hurts and you just go on," said Butler. "After a week, your feet are all callouses and sore muscles; you just ignore a lot of it and keep going every day."

The long days wear firefighters out. "You sleep anywhere," said Butler. "It's amazing where you can just pop your body and be comfortable. You just adapt to anything."

One of the things crews must adapt to is dirt. According to Cook, some of the crews in the upper camps go up to two weeks before they can get down to base camp to wash their clothes and take a shower. "It gets pretty bad. You try to do what you can. If you can get just a small water supply, you get your face and hands and whatever you can. Sometimes you don't have that. You do what you can," said Butler.

"It's all in your hair and you're just black and dirty. It's gross, because the dirt — it'll go clear up your legs. You're just dirty, inside and out," she said.

The smoke wears on crews as well, they said. "What's difficult on those crews is the inversion from the smoke in those high mountain valleys. You have to sleep in that, and they go and work in it in the morning. So you have that smoke building up. That has kind of a cumulative effect."

The stress, and body and smoke fatigue are the main reasons for the 21-day limit on the fire lines, according to Uintah National Forest Public Information Officer Loyal Clark.

According to Butler and Cook, there are many other hazards besides fire and smoke: terrain, sickness, stress and the high elevation for crews from the east. "There are bees, sticks to trip over, holes to walk in," said Cook. Even bears can be a problem.

The danger from the fire itself is manageable, according to Cook, who led three crews from California. The crew leaders will never risk the lives of their crew, no matter how much pressure is being applied by the bureaucracy to get the fire out.

"You feel the urgency to put the fire out, but that's second to taking care of the safety of your people," said Cook. "There is never a situation where you put your people in jeopardy to try and put out the fire."

One of the main functions of a crew is to dig line, they said. That means creating a line in front of the fire that is 18 inches to three feet wide that is void of fuel for the approaching fire to burn.

"A lot of times, it's like a three foot break that you dig down to mineral soil so that there are no leaves, roots, anything. And if the fire's creeping along the ground, it'll stop right at that point," said Butler.

Another part of building a line is to cut the canopies out of the trees with chainsaws, thus destroying the aerial fuels a fire feeds on, said Cook.

Building a line is back-breaking work, they said. It is frustrating as well, especially when a fire jumps the line. The jumps are due to two factors: the fire traveling in the air and the fire travelling under the ground.

According to Cook and Butler, the wind can easily carry burning debris a half mile, sometimes starting fires upon impact. This is known as "spotting." Butler even told of spotting two miles away from the actual fires in Yellowstone.

Fire in the root systems of trees is a different problem. "If the fire goes underneath the ground, you can spray it on top all you want, but when the heat is under the ground like that, it will travel under the roots and pop up anywhere — for days afterwards. That's what's frustrating," said Butler.

While the recent break in the weather has given crews a better opportunity to build more effective fire lines and control spotting, the rain and snow, according to Cook, are a "two-edged sword."

"It's cold and miserable and unpleasant," said Butler. It's nice to find a little bit of fire to kind of steam yourself out and dry you up a little bit. Then put the fire out."

Stopping a forest fire is not just drudgery, however.

"It is so beautiful when you get on top of some of these mountains. It's just gorgeous to look down at a fire at night. It is really pretty, almost like a city. I know that sounds bad, but it is really pretty to look at," said Butler.

"It's like looking at a tiger or some beast out there. It's true, it's beautiful, but you look at it with respect because you know what it can do," said Cook. "but it is pretty awesome at night to see it burning."

A strong finish was not enough for the BYU golf team at the William H. Tucker Invitational Golf Tournament, which concluded Saturday at the University of New Mexico.

The Cougars struggled a bit in the first two rounds, Thursday and Friday, but rebounded in the tourney's final round, firing a 293 to move into 12th place overall, with a score of 912. The final round 293 tied BYU for the second best team score in the round, and it moved the Cougars up three places in the final standings.

Consistency was the key for Oklahoma, as the Sooners shot 290 on each day of the tournament to take first place with an overall score of 870. USC finished in second place with an 875, followed by UNLV 876, Arizona 879, Texas A&M 885, and New Mexico (Cherry) at 886.

Weber State rode a final round 298 into 11th place with an overall 901, followed by BYU 912 and Utah.

BYU coach Karl Tucker was pleased with his team's final round performance.

"I thought it was a great day for us," he said. "The only team in the conference who bear us was New Mexico, and I feel like we're probably right on target for what we need to do. I'm especially pleased with Eddie Heinen shooting 69 today."

The individual champion was Oklahoma's Matthew Lane, who beat out Hub Goyen of UNLV on the second hole of a playoff. Both golfers finished the tourney at 209.

The leading local golfer was Weber State's BEAU Yakomoto, whose three-day total of 222 put him in a tie for 18th place.

Soccercats triumph by taking 5-2 victory

By VICKI WILSON
Universe Sports Writer

The BYU men's soccer team continued its winning streak by defeating California Baptist 5-2 Friday at Haws Field.

The Cougars trailed 1-0 during most of the first half until Rob Edwards, senior forward from American Fork, tied it up with a shot he received from the goalie, Mike Knipps, a sophomore from Golden, Colo.

Lancer coach Howard Boyer said he thought his team had a great chance of winning after the first half. "We played an excellent first half. I felt we had them (BYU) struggling," he said.

The Cougars found themselves trailing again at the start of the second half when the Lancers pulled ahead 2-1.

Warren Rapp, junior forward from Reno, Nev., put the Cougars back in the game by capitalizing on a cross pass from Mike Bodon, junior midfielder from Joplin, Mo.

After tying the game 2-2, the Cougars scored three unanswered goals to end the night.

John Allred, freshman forward from Bountiful, scored two of the three goals. The first one came from a follow-up shot after Rapp had a shot deflected by the goalie. The second one came on a diving head shot set up by a corner kick by Bodon.

Bodon also set up the last goal by passing the ball to Rapp for the score.

Cougar coach Dave Woolley said, "We were behind but we worked out the few inaccuracies in our play and turned the heat up. They (the Lancers) were a very good team tonight."

Cougars conquer Air Force with 27-21 last-minute win

BRENT BROWN
Universe Sports Writer

For the second game in a row, BYU's junior varsity football team escaped with a last second win by beating Air Force 27-21, Friday at Cougar Stadium.

Air Force drove the ball to the 10-yard line before being stopped by a gutsy defense as time expired. Three weeks ago BYU escaped Snow College with less than a minute in the game to win 24-23.

Cardiac kids? Head Coach Mark McElroy is beginning to think so. "We are exciting. I really liked the way we played today."

The first half ended in a 7-7 tie. Most of BYU's offense came from halfback Stacey Corley. Corley busted up the middle for a 12-yard touchdown run to put BYU up 7-0. McElroy said, "Corley was outstanding. He was definitely our most productive player of the game."

Air Force came back to tie the game on a BYU mistake. Punter Dietrich received a poor snap in center and had his punt blocked and recovered by Air Force. The end zone for a touchdown and a halftime tie.

The second half started with BYU and Air Force trading touchdowns. BYU got two scores on touchdown passes by quarterback Chris Hoge to Andy Boyce and Tyler Anderson. Air Force answered with two touchdowns runs, but failed on both their extra point conversions.

With 1:39 left in the game and BYU up 21-19, Corley broke a draw play 28 yards up the middle for his second touchdown. Corley ran for 126 yards in the game and appeared to put the icing on the cake for BYU.

Then a new college football rule threw a twist into the game. BYU kicker, Keith Lever had his try for extra point blocked and under the new rule Air Force returned the ball 97 yards for two points.

Air Force then took the kickoff and moved the ball to BYU's eight-yard line with four seconds left. When their option play was stopped at the three-yard line BYU had its second win.

McElroy said there were some solid individual performances, but pointed out the defense led by defensive backs Josh Arnold, Tau Harrington and linebacker Joe Richardson.

The JV will put its 2-0 record on the line by traveling to Rexburg Thursday to take on Ricks College.

Women win tourney bikers raise season record to 13-2

HARILYNN COX

The BYU women's volleyball team ended its weekend tournament in the Island with three straight wins, bringing its season record to 13-2. The Cougars defeated the Providence Friars Friday night 15-5, 15-5, in the first match of the Rhode Island Village Inn Classic held in Johnston, Rhode Island. The Cougars went on to defeat the Northeastern Huskies 15-5, 15-5, 15-1 and the Rhode Island WRams 15-4, 16-14, 10-15-9 Saturday afternoon and Sunday.

The Cougars held the Friars to a hitting percentage of .134 while dominating with a percentage of .463. Setter Daphne Gee played the best game of the season after being sidelined because of a stress fracture.

Gee had 11 assists and one service ace.

Back in for the Cougars was sophomore outside hitter Marinda Gordon, who had three kills. Junior setter Sherie Sam Fong, with 29 assists and three service aces, continued to excel.

Duncan was named Most Valuable Player in her second straight tournament.

BYU provides language houses

STEPHANIE E. BISHOP
Universe Staff Writer

BYU's Foreign Language Houses, organized by the College of Humanities, present a unique living environment where students live, eat together and practice conversation in a foreign language.

There are 15 foreign houses on campus including Chinese, three French, two German, two Italian, one Japanese, one Portuguese, two Russian and two Spanish houses. The one Hebrew house is occupied this Semester. The houses have separate living quarters for men and women.

BYU students living in the language houses eat dining meals together and all participate in food preparation and chores, according to language house literature.

Residents also participate in group activities and cultural events to allow maximum verbal practice in the native language.

To be a resident of the houses, a person must be a U student and must have two semesters of a university level language or its equivalent in foreign residency or a high school language.

Students living in these houses also take a pledge to use only the specific foreign language in the house, according to the literature.

According to Ron Dodson, bishop of the Foreign Language House ward of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, all residents living in the 15 houses attend Church meetings together and function as a ward unit. He said there are approximately 140 single members in the 64th ward.

Some of the reasons students live in the houses, according to Dodson, who has been bishop of the LDS ward for 14 months, include the students' interest in international and foreign service, government work, teaching specific languages and enjoyment in speaking the language. Many of the ward members are returned missionaries from foreign-speaking missions, he said.

Although English is the language used in all the Sunday meetings, "there is an emphasis on the international aspect of the ward. We take advantage of the international students in our ward and encourage activities with a foreign theme," said Dodson.

"There is a bond unique to the school because these students have the same living environment. By their nature, they tend to be language and arts interested people," he said. "They are a very bright group."

According to Laura McLennan, a junior from Louisville, Kentucky, who has lived in the Russian house for three semesters, "Living in the house helps you learn the language because you speak it on a regular basis."

McLennan, who is a Russian major, said she plans on going to Russia next year, "if I have the money." She said concerning the Russian language, "It is interesting to try and it is not that hard."

Timothy Inman, a junior majoring in French, is a transfer student living in the French house. There are 10 men living in the house this semester, according to Inman.

"It is less expensive to live in the house and very practical," he said. Inman, originally from northern Florida, served an LDS mission in Paris and said living in the house "gives him the chance to speak fluent French with others."

However, "It gets difficult to adjust to the language, but we survive," he said.

For more information concerning the language houses, contact the Foreign Language Houses office, 2054 JKHB or call 378-2775.

International activities abound in Asian ward

STEPHANIE E. BISHOP
Universe Staff Writer

The BYU Asian Ward of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints offers a range of international activities for the single and married foreign student and their families.

The international ward, organized more than 10 years ago, has approximately 200 members that "come and go" according to Honam Rhee, the ward clerk.

"After school they go and go back to their respective countries," Rhee said.

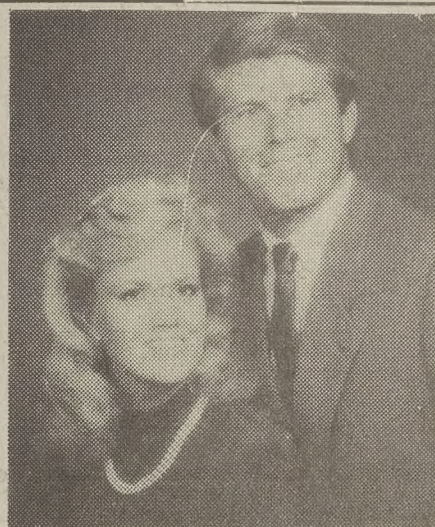

Rhee has been bishop of the ward for three months, replacing Spencer Palmer, who is serving with his wife as president of the Seoul, Korea Temple. Palmer was also a former associate director and helped organize the U's David M. Kennedy Center for International Studies.

Sunday meetings are scheduled at 2 p.m. According to Rhee, who is also a U professor of Asian and Near Eastern languages (Korean), there are approximately nine different Asian nationalities represented in the ward including Vietnamese, Taiwanese, Filipino, Chinese and Korean.

such as Korean, Japanese, Mandarin, Cantonese and English, according to Rhee. However, speakers during sacrament meeting speak the "international language (English)," said Rhee.

Activities in the Asian ward are typical of any LDS ward, but, according to Rhee, many of the events "have a taste of the different nationalities."

He said that during Relief Society homemaking many different foods and dishes from Asian countries are sampled and recipes shared.

Olympic athletes expelled by officials for illegal drug use

Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — Officials announced two more suspensions for Olympic athletes Saturday after Romania, stung by the loss of two gold medals in a drug scandal, pulled its entire weightlifting team out of the Olympics.

The suspensions of weightlifters from Hungary and Spain brought to 10 the number of athletes expelled in the first week of the Seoul Games.

Two — an Australian and a Romanian — were competing in the men's pentathlon. The Australian, Alexander Watson, said Saturday that a Romanian official had told him his drink to have him thrown out because the Australian's own anti-drug campaign had embarrassed the official. He refused to name the official.

The biggest effect on the medal standings came from the Bulgarian disqualification and withdrawal. The Bulgarians had won four of five weightlifting golds before two were taken away, and had been among the favorites to win at least three of the remaining five.

In a statement Saturday after the disqualification, the Bulgarian weightlifting association would investigate these irregularities casting a shadow on the reputation of the Bulgarian sport, and take measures against the athletes, the trainers and the doctor of the weightlifting team."

Words have roots in other lands

Original meanings bring insight into English language

By CAMILLE GOODRICH
Universe Staff Writer

Of the many ways in which foreign countries have added to our culture, the contribution of foreign words to the English language is one of the most interesting.

Much of the English language has Latin and Greek roots, and many words have origins in ancient mythology.

Mythology

Take for instance the word arachnid, a technical term for a large order of invertebrate which includes spiders and scorpions. According to the "Dictionary of Word and Phrase Origins" by William and Mary Morris, the word stems from a Greek myth in which Minerva, often known as the goddess of spinning, weaving and needlework, turned a princess named Arachne into a spider.

Another word with mythological associations is panic. The Morris dictionary explains that the mischievous Greek god Pan, who was a prankster, was often reported as darting out from under brush to startle people passing by, thereby throwing them into a state of "panic."

"The Story Behind the Word," by Morton S. Freeman, explains that panic is derived from people's fear of the eerie sound emanating from the forest, which they believed to be caused by Pan.

The word tantalize comes from a Greek myth in which a king, Tantalus, is punished for offending the gods. Tantalus is cursed with continuous hunger and thirst and placed into a lake with branches of fruit just out of his reach. Each time he stoops to drink, the water recedes.

Latin

Calculate and calculus both come from the Latin word calculus, meaning "a pebble." The abacus of ancient Rome used pebbles and a grooved board on which calculations were performed.

Dismal, now an adjective meaning "gloomy, depressing, or foreboding," was once a noun meaning "evil day" from the Latin word dies mali, or evil days. The Romans had two days each month that they considered to be unlucky.

Naive is from the Latin word nativus, (from which we also get the word native). The Romans used the word to distinguish untutored farm people from the more sophisticated and cultured city dwellers.

Many English words are derivations of Latin or other words from foreign countries while some are taken directly from the language — spelled and pronounced the same in both languages.

German

For example, kindergarten, sauerkraut and gesundheit are German words now common in English.

Blitz is the German word for "lightning or flash" and combined with krieg, meaning "war," it described Hitler's military strategy. The Americanized version of blitz means "any quick triumph."

Italy

The English language has directly borrowed many Italian words such as pasta, zucchini, lasagna, ravioli and mafia. Barbecue comes from the Spanish and Italian word barbacoa, which means "frame work of sticks" and refers to the device used for roasting a whole animal over an open fire.

French

From the French we have words such as avant-garde, laissez faire, alliance, souffle and hors d'oeuvre.

Chic is a French word meaning "smartly and properly dressed, with a certain flair for style in clothes and manner."

Detente is borrowed from the French and signifies a gradual easing of tension in a political situation.

Espionage is taken almost exactly from the French word espionnage. Another French word, facade, comes from the Latin facies, meaning "face or appearance." The words face and facet are also derived from this same root.

Japan

The Japanese have given us words such as ricksha (or rickshaw); karate, which means "empty hand"; judo; tsunami; and hara-kiri (or hari-kari) which in Japanese literally means "a cutting of the belly."

Russia

English has also borrowed the Russian word vodka and the Spanish word junta. The word mohair comes from the Arabic word mukhayyar, meaning the hair of the Angora goat and fabric made from this hair.

Scotland

Freeman's book explained that the word blackmail started in Scotland and referred to extortion money freebooters during Medieval times demanded for leaving estates unmolested.

Black meant "evil or bad or illegal" and mail (from mal or mael) was taken from the Scottish word for rent, a payment agreed upon.
